

South American in Audience at Opening of Fall Fashions at Luncheon' in Persian Terrace

By NORMA STONE

We always knew that the Addis Co.'s "Fashions at Luncheon" in the Persian Terrace, Hotel Syracuse, was popular with Central New Yorkers, but not even our estimable TV station WHEN could beam the show to Venezuela. So, a charming young woman from Maracaibo came to the opening of the fall fashion luncheon series yesterday.

Delighted with the latest fall outfits was Mrs. George P. Hanna Jr. who was the guest of Mrs. Nate Vescera, Mrs. Amelia J. Serio and Mrs. Charles Richtmeyer made up the foursome at the table. Mrs. Hanna is in town with her husband and daughters, Judith and Janet, visiting her father, Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Schindler, and Mrs. Schindler of 137 Robinson St.

When one lives in another country and yearns for the latest styles, what could be better than seeing them at a fashion show? Before she returns, Mrs. Hanna will be well supplied with U. S. clothes.

What might be packed in her trunks aboard the Santa Rosa next month is a luxurious coat of shaggy mohair. One modeled yesterday was a muted green with a bulky fur collar of green-dyed fox. It tapered softly to about two inches below the knee, which Miss Eleanor Baldwin of The Addis Co., commentator at yesterday's showing, recommended.

Among the models for the luncheon series are two new faces, Joan Fleischman and Helen Wagner. All of the girls wore the new silhouettes. Lines are easy, relaxed, draped or softly flowing.

Hats range from the furry beaver-bodied brims to draped velvet turbans. One in a rose-red velvet was pinned off center with brilliants.

A provocative bird was mounted on a velvet hat, worn by Miss Baldwin. The chapeau is calculated to be a conversation piece. The bird on Miss Baldwin's deep blue velvet hat inspired Carol, the elevator operator at The Addis Co. to ask: "Miss Baldwin, is that bird looking for the hole in your head?"

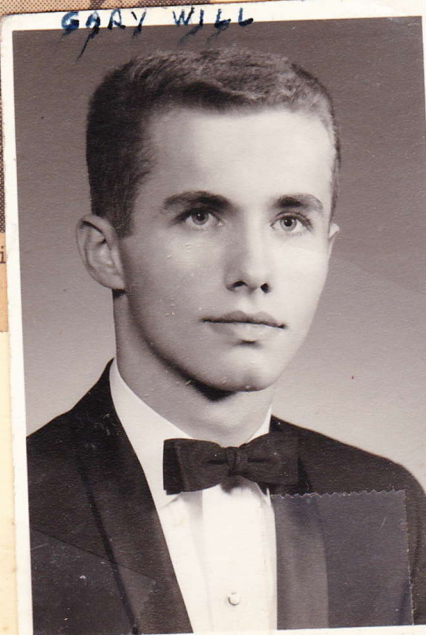

Miss Baldwin disclosed that entire showing in the Terrace Room will be repeated today in the store so that buyers, fitters and department heads can see the latest fashion trends.

ALONG THE RAMP.—Evoking "oohs and aahs" at Fashions at Luncheon was a black peau de soie gown, draped softly and enlivened with a side pouf. The fall look is easier to wear and appealing eye too!
