

BY CHAS. H. WILKINSON AND JOHN I. COSGROVE.

HE glorious Class of 1909 has been grievously amazed that there had not been a Bald-headed Club formed previous to our senior year, but the true reason was confidentially told to me by a most prominent member, and he said that the only trouble had been the selection of a president.

It seems that the honor was so coveted that ill feeling cropped up, and that is the explanation for the failure to get the club into operation.

But this difficulty was nicely overcome when the men who had striven for the honor of president first laid eyes upon our new arrival, Hair Ruempler, and they all agreed that they had at last found a man who was fully qualified to be the president of such a club, so Hair Ruempler was unanimously elected president. It has been rumored that Heine Krause was so horribly upset that he did not get the presidency that for spite he immediately took to using a hair restorer. However that may be, the members think that they have still a worthy member in Heine.

Barrett was chosen for vice-president, although not without much opposition. Barrett was so pleased with this honor that he said that he did not care if the boys did call him "Baldy" hereafter.
